Alternatives to the Economics of the Jungle

A Comprehensive Look at the Often-Overlooked Catholic Church Teachings on Economics and Social Matters

COLLEGEVILLE, MN (September 22, 2015)—In his new book, Catholic Economics: Alternatives to the Jungle, Angus Sibley, an actuary and former member of the London Stock Exchange, deftly uses the extensive body of teachings from the Catholic Church on economics and social matters to offer practical alternatives to what he deems to be major errors in conventional economic thinking.

Taking on the subjects of inequality, unemployment, and degradation of our environment, Sibley illustrates our faulty economic theories. He argues that we've been led astray by ideas that made some sense in the past but are unsuited to our times and by ideas that are fundamentally mistaken.

"Fluent in the language of Catholic social teaching, as well as that of finance and international economics, [Sibley] bares the dangerous allure of libertarian thought," said Tom Roberts of the National Catholic Reporter. "He provides us a detailed yet accessible guide, rich in history, through the jungle to a new way of thinking about economics."

Catholic Economics is available directly from Liturgical Press. Visit litpress.org or call 1-800-858-5450 for more information.

About the Author

Angus Sibley is an actuary and former member of the London Stock Exchange. Received into the Catholic Church at Farm Street Jesuit Church, London, in 1999, he has long been interested in the church's economic and social teachings. He is the author of The "Poisoned Spring" of Economic Libertarianism (Pax Romana, 2011) and of around one hundred articles in American, British, French, and Irish periodicals. Now retired, he lives with his wife Aurora in Paris.
